GETTING THE BEST OUT OF LIFE ON THE FARM.

T. F. PECK TELLS OF THE GREAT OPPORTUNITY ON THE FARM--FARMERS SHOULD BE PROUD OF CALLING.

In traveling over the country, did you ever notice how much more attractive the landscape at a distance looked than that in your immediate vicinity. The coloring was more harmoniously blended. That near you exposed the erosions of the soil, the unsightly, unsymmetrical trees, rough boulders, the thorns and rubbish. The unsightly things that mar the view or immediate surroundings in the same way. We see all the obstacles, all the handicaps; imaginations picture some other section of the country as free from what we encounter, but when we reach the pictured El Dorado, we find it, too, has its scars, and its handicaps. Young men on the farm imagine from their glimpse of the cities, the gay windows, the moving picture shows, the different forms of entertainment and amusement that their cup of happiness would be full if they could live in the city. It is only after they go there and undertake to get a foothold, that they get a glimpse of the other side of the picture. Positions are not always easy to secure and living is expensive; they find more demands for money, and to secure it means long hours of just as laborious toil as on the farm. They find that the people with leisure and money to enjoy the things that lured them to the city, are either the rich, or the transient visitor, such as they had been on their occasional visits to the city; that most of the people of the city were hard at work to meet the demands for living there. While the farmer's work is hard, he has time when he can get away to hunt or fish, to go for a visit to the city; he can enjoy the sights, take in the picture shows, enjoy his visit to the city and return to his farm and see that his crops have been growing right along. When a man who labors for wages, stops work, wages, stops but his expenses go right along.

I know that much has not been done that could and should be done to make home life more attractive to the boys and girls on the farm, I know that neglecting to do it has robbed the farm of thousands that would be there today, if it had been done. I know, too, that in view of the increasing demand for food products of the farm, it is imperative that the farm must be made attractive to the boys and girls. This is necessary for the city dwellers as well as the country. We are interdependent and should co-operate in the solution of the problems that we are the foundation of our national life and prosperity. I am glad that caricatures of the "Country Rube" and "hayseed farmer" are less frequent in our papers. We must dignify farming to the rightfully belongs, the foundation for all prosperity. No farmer has cause to be ashamed of his vocation. He should be proud of it. Instead of being ashamed of it, let us learn all we can of its possibilities and intelligently make the most of those possibilities. When intelligently and industriously practiced, we will have no cause to regret or be a shamed of being a farmer.

Primarily agriculture was the only vocation. Farmers needed conveniences as civilization advanced, and to provide them other vocations were developed. No matter how far we advance in the art and sciences, agriculture will retain its place as a fundamental of all industrial activity. While it is the oldest vocation known to man, it is classed with the newer sciences and we have progressed far enough in the science to realize that its possibilities for research and development are practically unlimited. While agriculture will reward the illiterate a living for his labor. No vacation offers a broader field to the person with a well rounded education for the full use of his qualifications.

We are rapidly increasing in population. The resources of the country are being developed by an increasing proportion of our population and they must be fed by our agriculture classes, insuring a certain market for their product. As to the profit to the farmers for his product, that depends on the co-operative effort on the part of the farmers in marketing their product. One lesson the farmers have been slow in learning, is that they must apply practical business methods in marketing their products as well as industry in producing. When that lesson is learned and practiced the farmer will come unto his own.

YUBY DAM MAYOR AT RED SPRINGS FOR HIS HEALTH--NO PLACE LIKE IT.

Here I am away off from Yuby Dam.

I've handed the keys of my city over to Barfoot Owens and trotted over here to get a drink from the healing springs. I found much water here, water to superfluity. Indeed, enough to cure all the thousand and one ills that human flesh is heir to.

This is indeed a great watering place. People from many "points" are here, and many from other "points." I am meeting many people and quite a number are meeting me. Some are ailing and some are here as a preventive, along the line of a stitch in time saves nine. And so it is, everybody out for their health. So it has ever been all down through the ages. In every land men have tried to stay the cold icy touch of the "Grin Reapers" hand.

The savage beats the tom-tom over the head of the poor sick and weary jay, to scare the evil spirits away. Then come the herb doctors, herbs and bitters and concoctions galory, and salves and poultices for every festering sore. And doctors of every school; Homeopath and Alopah and Osteopath, have tried their hand on pain in vain. Until men cried out and said, is there no balm of Gilead. Then came the healing springs, solving all these things, whispering long life and a second wife unto you. So do not doubt, or hesitate, or wait, if you are ill do not swallow down another pill. Do not go and try the knife to save your life, and be cut and carved and cut into to see what is wrong with you, but come on hear without a fear. Here is the place for you.

When your liver wont budge a bit. And your kidneys want to quit. And your appetite goes away for many aday. And your other organs feel kinder like they would like to go on a strike and you are about to do your final do. And the devil is at your door, here is the place for you.

Never say die, when getting well is as easy as eating apple pie.

Yours on down adinfinitum.

The water drinking.
